Survive and Thrive: Transition Acceleration for New Local Health Officials

11:00 AM – 12:30 PM

Sponsored by ESRI

Transition into a new position is a time of opportunity and vulnerability. The more quickly your agency and the people that hired you see the value that you have added, the better it will be for you and your agency. This is why your transition period is so important. Listen to peers share their pitfalls, political defeats and early wins so you can quickly get up to speed with the challenges and vulnerabilities that you face as a new local health official.

Novel H1N1 Roundtable

1:45 PM – 2:45 PM

This roundtable will provide participants with the opportunity to share experiences and lessons learned from the novel H1N1 outbreak. Topics such as the following, although not an exhaustive list, will be open for discussion:

- What worked well when operationalizing your plans, and what did not work so well?
- What resources did you need to adequately respond to the epidemic?
- Was NACCHO of service to you? How could it have been of greater service to you?
- How has this epidemic changed your planning and preparations for the upcoming flu season?

In order to facilitate a discussion, there will be a maximum of 40 attendees in this session. Those wishing to register should email Kate Petersen at kpetersen@naccho.org. NACCHO staff will document the discussion and share relevant findings with our members and partners, including the CDC, as appropriate.
