Overview

NACCHO is the voice of the approximately 2,800 local health departments (LHDs) across the country. These city, county, metropolitan, district, and Tribal departments work to protect and improve the health of all people and all communities. NACCHO provides resources to help LHD leaders develop public health policies and programs to ensure that communities have access to the vital programs and services people need to keep them protected from disease and disaster. Additionally, NACCHO advocates on behalf of LHDs with federal policymakers for adequate resources, appropriate public health legislation, and sensible policies to address the myriad of challenges facing communities.

Background

Adverse childhood experiences, often referred to as ACEs, are preventable, potentially traumatic events that occur in childhood (0-17 years) such as neglect, experiencing or witnessing violence, and having a family member attempt or die by suicide. ACEs also include aspects of a child's environment that can undermine their sense of safety, stability, and bonding, such as growing up in a household with substance use, mental health conditions or instability due to parental separation or incarceration of a parent, sibling or other member of the household.^{1,2} These examples do not comprise an exhaustive list of childhood adversity, as there are other potentially traumatic experiences that could impact health and wellbeing. ACEs often occur together, can result in toxic stress, and are associated with a wide range of adverse behavioral, health, and social outcomes, including substance use, depression, overweight/obesity, lower education and earnings potential, and chronic diseases such as heart disease and cancer.³

Families who are involved in the child welfare and justice systems may have been impacted by ACEs.⁴ The presence of a substance use disorder (SUD) among parents and/or caregivers, which can contribute to involvement in both systems, has been associated with less responsive parenting, lower parenting self-efficacy, and lower rates of reunification success among child welfare-involved families.^{4,5,6} In addition to impacts of ACEs at the individual level, systems involvement can destabilize family structures, limit employment and economic opportunities, and isolate individuals from their communities, further propagating the cycle of generational trauma.⁴

While ACEs can contribute to negative lifelong health and social consequences, positive childhood experiences (PCEs) also profoundly affect health and development, potentially preventing or buffering against toxic stress created by adverse experience.⁷ The Healthy Outcomes from Positive Experiences (HOPE) framework builds on existing knowledge about ACEs and trauma-informed care and aims to “shift how we see and talk about the positive experiences that support children’s growth and development into healthy, resilient adults”.⁸ The four building blocks of HOPE identify key PCEs, and the sources of those experiences and opportunities. They include relationships; safe, equitable environments; social and civic engagement; and emotional growth. Similarly, the Strengthening Families (SF) framework* takes an evidence-informed, five factor approach to helping families increase their strengths and reduce their risk of abuse and neglect, which in turn facilitates healthy child development.⁹ The five factors include parental resilience; social connections; knowledge of parenting and child development; concrete support in times of need; and social and emotional competence of children. Research supports a focus on the four building blocks of HOPE in work with youth and families and the use of instruments to measure the SF protective factors.^{10,11}

Taken together, the SF and HOPE frameworks provide organizations with a comprehensive understanding that positive experiences affect health and other outcomes at both the individual and family levels. While both frameworks are motivated by a deep respect for parents and families, SF focuses on family-level factors and preventing child maltreatment, while HOPE focuses on the children’s experiences and increasing their access to positive experiences. Many organizations already have some familiarity with SF, so combining its focus on family-level factors with the HOPE child-focused building blocks allows organizations to enhance existing, implemented models and practices and support strategies for promoting and providing access to PCEs. In this project, the two frameworks will be combined. Learning community calls and individual technical assistance will address topics such as organizational support of family strengths and resiliency, the provision of culturally resonant services, and interactions with families, through a lens that simultaneously considers both family- and child-level factors.

Project Overview

The Strengthening Systems-Involved Families with HOPE (SSIF) training project aims to guide local health departments (LHDs) and their child welfare and justice system partners through the process of integrating the SF and HOPE frameworks into their work with children and families. The combination of these two frameworks for systems-involved families has been uniquely created for this funding opportunity. The SSIF project will assist organizations in shifting their work with families impacted by SUDs from a deficit- to an asset-based model to improve provider-family relationships, reduce biases, and improve family outcomes.

As part of this program, the selected participants will receive training on the HOPE and SF frameworks and individualized technical assistance (TA). Selected LHDs and their partners will be expected to:

- 1) Participate in a kick-off call
- 2) Participate in six (6) learning community calls built on the six standards of HOPE created by the HOPE National Resource Center:
 - a. Learn about the SF and HOPE frameworks
 - b. Support family strengths and resilience
 - c. Offer anti-racist and culturally resonant services
 - d. Create and amplify the Four Building Blocks of HOPE

* Please note that the CSSP Strengthening Families framework (SF) is different than the Strengthening Families Program (SFP), which is an evidence-based family skills training program for high-risk and general population families. This training grant funding opportunity is to learn the CSSP SF protective factors framework.

- e. Engage in continuous learning and improvement
- f. Implement HOPE-informed strategies
- 3) Complete pre- and post-session activities including:
 - a. Quality and process improvement activities
 - b. Organizational assessments
 - c. Implementation team development
 - d. Learning Community call evaluations
- 4) Participate in individualized TA calls
 - a. Bi-weekly sessions to further discuss content and develop implementation plans
 - b. Optional office hours with HOPE staff
 - c. Additional meetings upon request
- 5) Identify up to three (3) individuals to complete the training to become a HOPE facilitator
- 6) With support from TA providers, develop a focused implementation plan for the next year

Funding for this RFP is supported by the CDC cooperative agreement 6 NU38OT000306-05-05 titled Strengthening Public Health Systems and Services through National Partnerships to Improve and Protect the Nation's Health.
